A proposition to hold the next convention in San Francisco was held in abeyance, as it seemed to be the will of the delegates to come again to Washington next year.

A network of airplanes flying both night and day over the United States and Alaska which will make neighbors of every important business center in the country and effect a twenty-seven-hour mail service between New York and San Francisco was visualized before the delegates today by Second Assistant Postmaster General Paul Henderson.

Second Assistant Postmaster General Henderson, in his speech, told the postmasters that air mail service so far as daytime flying was concerned is already on a practical basis, but that as the time the planes made up on the trains in the daytime they lost during the night while they were idle the department has been working on a practical scheme for night

H. H. Billany, fourth assistant post-master general, in his address told the postmasters that "a survey of conditions within our own country can only promote a feeling of opti-mism and confidence."

"With the settlement of the big strikes," Mr. Billany continued, "the harvesting of our bounteous crops and a full employment and contentment of labor, we are about to enter a period of prosperity which will be re-flected in the postal business of our country.

"May I express to you my congratulations for your organisation in its personnel and its co-operation with the department, with the thought that, upon the close of this convention and your return to your duties, your aim will be for even greater accomplishments for the betterment of the service in the future.

"I believe that the policy of the Post Office Department should be service rather than profit and the aim of the postmaster to expedite the mails and insure accurate and prompt delivery."

Question Box a Feature.

Other talks during the morning session were made by Postmaster A. L. Behmyer of Cincinnati, Postmaster Charles E. Black of Omaha and T. G. Under the new plan of operation, which was adopted after a careful study of a special committee on coordination of night and day schools, headed by Mr. Patterson, it will be possible for students who complete the required course to be rewarded with a diploma. While not fully the equivalent of a diploma awarded to the graduate of a day school, the night school diploma, according to supt. Frank W. Ballou, will be a "worthy testimonial of merit."

The night school instruction, under the definite course of study plan, will cover essentially the same ground as the required work in the day schools, but it will be simplified and adapted to meet the immediate needs of ambitious night students who are otherwise employed in the day. Twenty-four semester credits will be required for graduation. Each credit will represent an hour's work per school night for one semester of fifteen or more weeks. Students will have the choice of studies along several major lines, but at least two years of English and one of American history or civics will be necessary. Advance credit may be allowed for work elsewhere, but at least noe full year must where, but at least one full year must be spent in the District schools.

Charlotte Mills, the fifteen-year-old daughter of the slain choir singer, has received no reply, she said, to her appeal to Gov. A nurse who was present at the birth of Guy Stillman testified that Mrs. Stillman directed her to send a telegram to Beauvais in Canada, saying "Little Black Bear has arrived."

Chairman of Prevention Committee Says Department Is Handicapped. •

A system of high-pressure hydrants in the business area is the outstanding need of the Washington fire department. Charles W. Darr. chairman of the fire prevention committee, deeared today.

Mr. Darr said the need for stronger pressure with which to fight fires would be the principal topic for discussion at the next meeting of the ommittee.

"I am sure that my committee will do anything it can to aid the fire de-partment and the Commissioners in ob-taining from Congress the appropriation to begin installation of this important adjunct of a modern firefighting force," said Mr. Darr.

Letters in Case.

These witnesses, numbering more than a score, had their say in the spring, when trial of the case was temporarily shifted to Montreal. Some of them denied it would have been possible for Mr. Stillman's witnesses to have peeped through keyholes and from ladders at the Stillman summer camp, as the plaintiff's witnesses, had described, and others testified the relations between Mrs. Stillman and Beauvais were simply those of an employer and servant. One man testified, it was reported, that he had been offered $3,000 to swear he witnessed misconduct by Mrs. Stillman and Beauvais, and another said he had heard a conversation in which $5,000 was offered for such evidence of guilt. Mr. Stillman's attorneys denied the allegations of attempted bribery.

The trial before the referee came to a sensational close when counsel for Mr. Stillman put into evidence four letters purporting to have been written to Beauvais by Mrs. Stillman. They announced that Beauvais had sold the letters only a few days before to Mr. Stillman's agents for $15,000. Testimony to support this was heard. Mrs. Stillman immediately denied authorship of the letters, and Beauvais later denied that he had sold them. But they remained as evidence in the case.
